An idea based on an "entropic" control of the electronic energy conversion is proposed. It concerns quantum artificial aggregates whose electronic quantum state is controlled by the effective electrostatic potential generated by an external electric field. The energy exchange between the electronic and nuclear subsystems is mediated by the fluctuating electric field instead of the thermal one (heating). The nuclear-electronic energy conversion (work) is obtained by a variation of the parameter of the external electric field; the reverse energy flow (cooling) is attained by a process of appropriate time reversal. My (limited) understanding is that once a zero-day is discovered, the vendor most often holds off fixing or patching to the well-known vulnerabilities. The exploit/zero-day typically becomes "public domain" after a certain period of time, like 2-3 months, but is still zero days until the well-known vulnerabilities are patched? ~~~ drevuk The well known vulnerabilities are the 'non-zero day'. There's still a period of time before they are patched. ~~~ asdfologist You don't make it sound like they are working together. ----- dylanjermiah This site generates warnings about flash content: [If you're receiving a warning, you may be using an older browser. Evaluation of quality characteristics of apple cultivar Cirnejo Ciudad de Navarra 'Canela' grown in south Italy. Cirnejo Ciudad de Navarra 'Canela' is a recently developed apple cultivar originated in Spain, which combines a small fruit size, a low number of fruits per tree and very low sugar content. The aim of this study was to evaluate the effects of different environmental conditions on fruit size and sugar content in commercial apple orchards located in Puglia (Apulia region, Italy). The cultivar was planted in four different apple orchards (A-D) located at three main sites in the region. The results showed significant differences in both fruit size and sugar content depending on the site of growth and on the year of analysis. According to the seasons, A and B, which were characterized by higher temperatures and earlier harvest time, showed higher sugar contents (12.8 and 11.3 g/100 g of fresh weight, respectively) and smaller sizes (501 and 563 g, respectively). C and D, which were characterized by lower temperatures and later harvest time, showed higher sugar contents (13.5 and 15.6 g/100 g of fresh weight, respectively) and larger fruit sizes (940 and 1007 g, respectively). Fruit size and sugar content were also highly affected by the distance between trees and the distance between trees and the experimental orchard. Fruit size and sugar content were affected by different growing locations. Q: Use differential equations to solve $\frac{dy}{dx}$
