it all. It looks beautiful, even when it's 30-40 years old, and there are so many dungeon levels with entirely unique designs that it'll be a labor of love for many to unlock them all. It's simply a joy to look at. I can't say enough good things about this game. It's everything you could want in an action RPG." "This is an action RPG with a deep story, intriguing lore, and an abundance of the most adorable-looking monsters you've ever seen in your life. It's more than just a pretty show, though. The combat and world are filled with enough tactical finesse, combined with an earnest sense of exploration, to make for a fantastic experience with a story that will affect you long after you've stopped playing it. If you're looking for an action RPG with a unique setting and a lot of story, then Elden Ring is well worth your time." "Elden Ring: Tarnished is a solid strategy RPG that looks gorgeous and features a host of excellent characters, items, and bosses for you to work through. The story is decent, but I would have rather seen players be given a more meaningful ending." "Elden Ring: Tarnished's greatest asset is its ability to smoothly ease you into a new world. The gentle tutorial, the gradual introduction of new mechanics, and the transparent information about the land all help to make the game welcoming." "Elden Ring has a beautifully designed world to explore, and its characters are filled with personality that can be explored throughout your time with the game. The diverse and colorful characters make the experience feel very alive, and Elden Ring also does a great job of presenting you with a clear idea of what you're supposed to be doing with your time inside the game." "Elden Ring: Tarnished is an RPG that is not only excellent at its genre, but offers something that is genuinely new in that respect. The conversations with the townsfolk reveal a large amount of development on the part of the developers, and the storytelling touches on the player's emotional involvement by having the player act bff6bb2d33

People with disabilities in England have been told to keep an eye out for any signs that they are being excluded from using the NHS as they await the publication of a government-backed review into their experiences. The pledge, contained in a new communication from the NHS, comes after the Guardian revealed that statistics show that disabled people are far more likely than other people to be denied treatments or care on the NHS. Polly Denton, chief executive of disability charity Scope, said it was vital that disabled people knew when they were being excluded from access to the NHS. She called the statistics "hurtful and demeaning" and said the public's patience with the health service had come to an end. The pledge was agreed by a working group including disabled people, which also warned that government policy on disability is at a "critical juncture". The pledge is the result of an online survey which collected 4,000 responses from disabled people, their carers and parents about their experiences of healthcare. It is thought to be the first national survey to ask disabled people about the NHS in England. That survey has not yet been published. But in a letter to respondents, the Department of Health and Social Care outlined the government's work on the policy review into disabled people's experiences, and outlined the findings. The letter said: "As you will be aware, the government is currently conducting a review into people with disabilities and vulnerable people more generally. This is looking at how the NHS supports disabled people and those with disabilities to access services, and for the NHS to make things better for disabled people and those with disabilities." Theresa May is facing growing criticism from Labour, the Conservatives and the Liberal Democrats over the government's response to Universal Credit. Photograph: David Levene/The Guardian The government added: "You told us that there is more that the government could do to improve the NHS and support disabled people in accessing services. "The government is currently undertaking the most extensive review of disability and health services in living memory. We will report the findings in the autumn. "In the meantime, we have been listening to what people with disabilities and their families have said about their experiences of using the NHS." The letter states that "the NHS is a complex organisation" and "there are many different ways in which it
