See more on FIFA 16 and FIFA 17 In a press release, EA Sports said: "With the introduction of 'HyperMotion Technology', we've created a new level of on-screen immersion with gameplay that players truly feel they're controlling. With unparalleled accuracy and responsiveness, you'll experience a new dimension of on-screen action." FIFA 16 introduced "Human Intelligence Technology" which provided a new way for AI-controlled opposition players to react to real-life behaviour that was unseen in real-life before. For example, AI players would react differently to touch, aggressive tackles, tackles that catch an opponent out of position, etc. Unlike previous versions of FIFA, FIFA 16 allowed the user to easily make drastic and detailed adjustments to the game's AI settings. FIFA 17 received a number of major changes to its AI. AI players would no longer decide to pass to certain players after a key pass, a move which would have made sense if they were human, but would have made no sense if they were an AI player. In place of this, AI players learned to pass to the right-most unmarked player in FIFA 17. The same philosophy was applied to marking, where AI players would stop marking, kick off passes and run all-out to the nearest unmarked player, which they would then stay on. Player ratings improved, and FIFA 17 featured the introduction of "Football Intelligence", which allows the computer-controlled players to learn from their opponents. New tactics were also introduced in FIFA 17. FIFA 17 introduced tactical lines of control (a new system of football that helped bring the game closer in line with the demands of a tactical game), tackling the ball and attacking options after a tackle. FIFA 19 also introduced "Training Context", a new method of explaining the key attributes (fitness, agility, stamina, passing, shooting) of players, based on real-life statistics as well as key attributes of modern football. As was the case with FIFA 17, FIFA 19 introduced Tactics (Tactical Tacks) which allows the user to adjust how each player's actions during a pass, run, tackle and sprint were decided based on his ratings. Tactics also allowed the user to select which attribute or actions would be shown on the player's player card. Players could now create a custom-built player card, and could also add additional attributes. To create a custom-built player
