Hepatocellular carcinoma with extensive nodal metastases: preoperative detection with EUS. Hepatocellular carcinoma, commonly found with cirrhosis, is a radiologically detected tumor in 50%-80% of cases. Some patients are found to have nodal metastases at the time of diagnosis. The presence of lymph node metastases is prognostic, and therefore it is important for clinicians to find and biopsy these lesions preoperatively. The current standard of care is computed tomography (CT), but such scans are inaccurate in up to 50% of cases.

EUS is currently being explored as a means of detecting nodal and distant metastases. We present the case of a 48-year-old woman with a hepatocellular carcinoma and cirrhosis who underwent EUS for preoperative evaluation. EUS revealed a mass within the left periaortic location. After careful study of the splenic hilum, EUS-guided biopsy was performed. Pathology subsequently demonstrated neoplastic hepatocytes, consistent with an intrahepatic primary tumor. Hepatic EUS and periaortic EUS are being used more widely as a primary staging modality for hepatocellular carcinoma. The current literature suggests that EUS may be able to detect cancerous metastases in the lymph nodes and the perihilar location. In this case report, we present one of the few published reports of EUS being used as a method of diagnosis.Q:

Why did this question get so many down votes, and then later get closed? I posted this question: It was very near the bottom of the "hot" tab for quite some time. Then, at some point, it plummeted down the list, and got quite a few down votes and one close vote. Why did this question get so many down votes, and then later get closed? A: When I got here, two down-votes and a close vote were already on this post. It then got five more down-votes and two more close votes. I think that enough people found it problematic that it
