CRITIC'S COMMENTS: As any reader of this site should know, one of my greatest passions is to play games with other people. Everyone can drop by on the forum and chat about some game that we're playing, or a more casual game, but often, the virtual worlds that we enter are solitary and even isolating in nature. I don't play them often. What I enjoy more than anything is a game where I can play with other people. A game that lets me develop my character through teamwork is not only cool, but it's a form of social interaction that is entirely lacking in the real world. The Elder Scrolls Online lets me do just that. I've played it occasionally, but not very often, and I've never really seen it as a game that just has no offline mode. It doesn't seem to have a real offline mode, because it just feels like there is a community running around in the game, but it's just so powerful and immersive, I don't mind. In fact, as far as online MMOs go, ESO is one of the stronger ones I've ever played. The online community (which can be as large or small as you want it to be) is a really compelling one. There's always a lot of activity. Every few months there will be new things to do, quests to do, and adventures to take part in. Throughout all of this, you can help other people, or just play with them if that's what you want to do. Right now, the events that ESO seems to be running in particular are the Jailbreak, which involves sending people on missions to liberate NPC camps and cities that were captured by the Daedra, and The Elder Scroll: Harkyn's Redemption, which is a raid against a Necromantic boss, Nilztein. If you just want to play the game, then there are plenty of things to do. You can fight non-instanced Dungeons and take part in open world instances. You can join up with one of the five factions in the game, or you can do things on your own. It feels like there is always something going on. ESO is essentially a huge world that can be endlessly explored. People are free to go where they want and meet up with who they want, so it's not very restrictive. I've been in front of a camp, had a battle with a group of bandits, and played a dungeon, so there bff6bb2d33

Developpment patch is delayed.

I must explain something, sorry, I am little tired. It's an internal thing, we decide when it happens. It's not "next week", it's simply because my available hours are limited.

Just as there are out there on the highway, your no-plan lives are floating out there, too, and there are some things you have to do, some places you have to go, some people you have to meet, if you're to grow up, carry the burden of your experience, and find your place. We are, for a time, standing still, while the landscape rushes by. Some of us watch and comprehend, some of us merely notice, and some of us choose to get back in the car. But one thing we know, regardless of how we decide to spend this time, is that we have to spend it to be free. You are not free if you're missing something. I know what I'm missing. I hope you know what it is, too. I'm missing the me that used to know there was a me. I'm missing the kid who knew exactly what she was. Who knew exactly who she was. I'm missing the girl who turned her nose up at being confused. Who wouldn't look down at her own confusion. Who felt her own confusion was stupid. I'm missing the girl who was afraid of big feelings. Who felt that she was not allowed to have them. Who felt alone and scared and very very sad. Who felt very very disappointed. I'm missing the girl who was convinced that she was better than the girls who didn't. Who thought she deserved more. Who got upset when the rest of us got hurt. Who got upset that she was hurt. I'm missing the girl who understood that sometimes feelings were not acceptable. Who didn't want to
